THE SILVER BRIDGE.

ELIZABETH ACKERS ALLEN

The sunset fedes along the shore,
And faints beyond you roly reach of sea;
Nightfall again, but ah, no more,
No more, no more,
My love returns to me.
The lonely moon builds soft and slow
Her silver bridge across the main.
But him who sleeps the waves below
Love men us in vain,
Ah no, ah no,
He never comes again!

But when some night beside the sea.

I watch, when sunce is red has a cased to it hat silver path, and sigh, "Ah me,
Ah me, ah me,
He never will return."

If on that bridge of ripping light
His homeward feet should find their way.
I should not won ter at the sight,
But only say.

"Ab love, my love,
I knew you would not stay!" But when some night beside the sea.

"And should I withhold my permission?" The banker was becoming angry, and his eyes were very cold as he surveyed his visitor. The young man bowed.

"You will not do so, lest I find myself constrained to find means of having one without," he said, quietly. "I am still under the impression that a man should allow no other to speak for the woman he loves; that he should try to win, let what may stand in the way, and I take my final dismissal from her alone."

Leola said, pleasantly. "I don't think I'll mind very much, papa."

"I'll close my doors against you. I'll never look on your face again!" fumed the "stern parent." She paled then.

"Papa." ahe said, softly, "you'll not do that. You loved my mamma. Why whould I not love somebody, too? You may do what you will with your money, but love me still, papa. I could not live without it."

Here Dick came to the front again, swilling rather heartlessly. I confess at Five minutes, ten, fifteen went by; then there was a rustle of silken draperies in the hall, the door opened, and a beautiful girl entered the room. Beautia beautiful girl entered the room. Beautiful? Well, not perhaps with the simple beauty of chiseled features; not with the beauty at sight of which the sculptor's pulse might quicken; but a girl beautiful with the beauty of a true womanhood; with dark, unshadowed eyes, red, flexible lips, a smooth, white, girlish forehead and rich wealth of dusky hair, coiled low on the graceful head; a girl with ready smile, yet with enough of her father's iron will showing in chin and eyes and in the curves of her pretty lips to make one understand that she would hold her own in a struggle.

She had known the young lawyer fo six months, had met him here and there, for he was received in the best society; she had danced with him, and found him a good dancer; she had talked with him, and found him perhaps a trifle more than agreeable, being, unlike most of the men who conversed with her, earnest and frank, rather than in ane her, earnest and frank, rather than mane and complimentary. It had dawned on her that of late he had sought her be-fore others, had seemed to care for her society, and with the dawning of the knowledge had come a new pleasure to her. Unlike most young ladies of the present day, Leola Forrester did not value a man by his ancestry or his bank account.

"You wished to see me, papa," she said in a pleasant, clear voice, through the music of which one caught a ring of self confidence; then she saw Dick and,

smiling, held out her hand to him.

She looked from one to the other with open, wondering eyes; the young man was deadly pale and his lips were firmly d, he looked very unlike a lover, but very handsome for all that.
"You will kindly cling to facts, Mr Forrester," he said, quietry, and the bauker flushed angrily.

"What do you intend to imply? Have you more insolence to offer?" he asked.
"I offer no insolence," Dick answered, now recovering himself sufficiently to draw forward a chair for Leola, for which she thanked him. "I simply asked

"Papa"-Leola had not taken the chair Dick offered her, but stood near it, one hand resting on the back-"for shame papa," she cried; "is it necessary insult a gentleman who pays your daughter so great a compliment who is deserving at least of your courtesy? It was surely not a very promising manner in which the words were said; but then what could one expect? Surely the young barrister had been widely presumptuous when he, with his moderate income, his trifling practice, had come to ask the wealthy banker for the hand of his only daughter. The young man's face flushed hotly, but he kept his self-command, replying with admirable coolness.

"This is my sole business with you to day, Mr. Forrester. I have come to you, hoping for the consideration which man should show to man, independent of position, social difference, the world's opinion or anything outside of this one bare fact. I, with all the force of manhood, love your daughter, and ask your permission to go to herself and tell her ofit. You have not answered me yet sir."

"This is quite refreshing," he said, ironically, "being entirely unlooked for and unusual; but you shall be gratified." A servant answered the summons. "Tell Miss Forrester I wish to see her at once, if she is disengaged"

Here Dick came to the front again, smiling, rather heartlessly, I confess, at the scene which he had caused.

"I think this can be arranged a little differently, after all," he said, cheerfully. "I am not the presumptuous beggar you think me, Mr. Forrester; I am the fortunate inheritor of a very snug fortune left me lately by an aunt. F. A. Norton, formerly county sup rintendent of Harvey county, and lately proprietor of a second hand store at this place, has been arrested, charged with rape upon the person of Tamer Alleson, a little girl aged thirteen years, the daughter and only child of a widow with whom he was boarding. He took her out in a buggy, presumably for a short ride into the country where he was going to see some one. When in the he was going to see some one. When in the sand hills a few miles north of town, the sand hills a few miles north of town, the girl says he took her from the buggy, outraged her person, and then drove to McPherson, where he kept her over night and further required her to submit to him. He has a wife and several children living in Newton. Public feeling is generally excited against him, many declaring that he shall be lynched. He is a man aged thirty-five or forty years, and very intelligent, which makes the case doubly heirous.

LATER.—Prof. Norton, the man charged with the seduction of Mrs. Alleson's little girl, was taken out of town by private conveyance this afternoon, and taken to Newveyance this afternoon, and taken to New-ton jail. Before getting him out of town a large infuriated mob had gathered and treated him to a coat of tar.
